

As a working head of household it is very difficult to budget my time. When I am home with the family and have tasks that must be accomplished, I find it very annoying to stop my activities to tell someone NO I am not interested, only to have the same company call me again the next day, the following week and again the next month. When I want a service or item I am capable of contacting companies or stores to purchase what I need when I am ready - not when they are ready. With internet access I can contact companies almost any time day or night without interrupting my schedule or my family's schedule. Please do not allow the annoying, repeated phone calls to begin again!